Sugar Making in the West Indies. Let us follow a piece of cane. In a field close are forty men cutting canes, while forty womlop off the green parts and tie the rest into gh bundles. These are carried to the trace to nule wagon, as no wheels are allowed within field, for fear of injuring the roots. Thence y are brought to the yard and thrown down se to the door of the mill. Thereupon issue a ng, a portion of about fifty coolies, who are ployed in the works, and each takes about a zen canes, twists a piece of rope round for the avenience of carriage, and, bearing them off, osits them in a tray sloping to the crushing

. This consists of three revolving cylinders, ing a triangle, and being about four feet ng by two in diameter. The cane passes in beeen two of these, plump and fat, and comes out c other side a mangled piece of "megass," or begass," as it is less frequently called, with rdly a particle of moisture left in it. The mess is carried off through the opposite side of building, and spread out to dry, after which is used for burning under the sugar pans, giva clear, hot flame. The juice or " liquor,' is out from under the mill in a continuous eam, looking just like dirty water, and tasting ry nasty. Going through various sieves to ar it from small pieces of cane and dirt, it runs o the first of a line of coppers. These coppers ry both in number and size, in different works; ere may be four or five, or even six. The first the largest, of from 400 to 600 gallons, the pers being largest when their number is least; last, called the " teache," of 100 to 120 gal-

The liquor is warmed in the first copper, and, er having the dirt skimmed off, is gradually ed from one into the other, until it reaches "teache" and boiling point at the same ac. After boiling for a while, a "strike" is wie, and the " teache," which is now full of lid sugar, called "sling," is emptied into the der, a shallow wooden or iron tray. Here it mains for two days, being stirred at times to ak the crust and cause it to granulate; it is n put into hogsheads, each holding about a in which it stands for a considerable time to w the molasses (creacle) to drain out, and is a closed up and shipped for England.

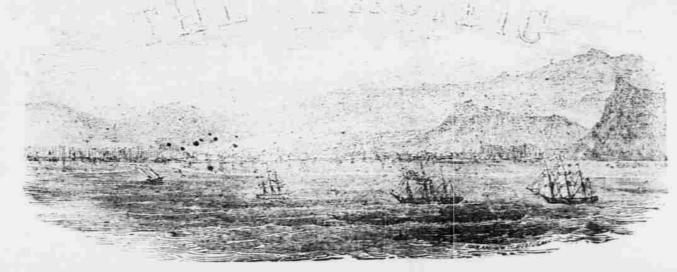

The horsheads containing the newly made suare kent standing in a store adjoining the floor consisting of open beams. ese the molasses drains, and is collect-. anks, or coppers set into the ground bei; thence when the opportunity for sale arit is simply strained into casks. The skim the boiling coppers is separated into two the worst being thrown into the manure e rest being spread upon the "chop-chop," green part of the canes, chopped up in a utting machine, and on which the mules ven thrive well. Good molasses is also on the food, or mixed with the water of le, plenty of lime being added to prevent yle of the works described above is the and oldest, yet makes as good sugar as til comparatively lately, most of the re worked by cattle, and the circular shelter may yet be seen, now turned into arracks or workshops. Water-power is 1, but fortunately the last estate with a ill set up a steam engine two years ago: ally, as this year there would be insuffio exceptions, windmills are used. Having no luntains to cause shelter, and being in the cenof the trade wind, or, as it is called on land, "crop wind," which blows steadily during spring months, they can always work, but

process is tedious though cheap. n Martinique and Guadaloupe " usines " have ly been introduced, which belong to compa-These have no estates of their own, but their canes, so that the neighboring estates we nothing to do but to grow their canes. In way, poor people can grow sugar on little s of land, which they would not otherwise be e to do. Most of the works in Trinidad have w the latest improvements-" clarifiers," large s in which the liquor is heated by steam pipes fore passing into the boiling coppers; " vacuum hs," in which the molasses is exhausted and the gar made quite white; steam pans and a dozen er inventions. The boiling coppers are also nerally reduced to three in number, large, with b teaches of small size, so that the strikes may more frequent, but in less quantity. One mill it I saw had four coppers and three teaches. Coming out from the m'll, it being then a litbefore noon, I found all the coolies returning m their day's work. On inquiry, I found that the had completed his "task," or the piece of rk allotted by law for a day's labor, and, refore, had done his work for the day. There many people in England who cry out about nigration and indentured labor, who surely w nothing about it. What laborer in Engd would not be glad to change his lot for such ne as the following? I take first the most faable case. The coolie is supplied with a house, nospital, and medical attendance if ill, earns rty cents (fifteen pence) a day, and can do that r's labor between the hours of seven a. m. and on, pasturage for his cow, and as much land as chooses to clear and cultivate in his leisure ars and on Sundays. Adding to this that his benses for clothes are not more than nominal, ing as they do, for a man, of cloth round the us and a jacket; that fuel need not be bought; · household furniture consists of two or three king-pans and a board to sleep on, the latter in supplied with the house; that his food costs, the utside, four pence a day, if he does not ow it on his own plot-what wonder, I say, t e returns to his own country with a large mue; that, contrasting his present condition that from which he came-a worse climate. ag : at fourpence or sixpence a day, and periodal tamines-he loses his cringing habits and bemes independent (and mayhap at times a little
